Airing Your Views

Dear Madam,

I read the August issue of your magazine and found it very interesting. I would be proud to contribute an article to your magazine some day, but for the present I am only "Airing my Views."

There are a variety of riches in life. Money is for some, while others feel richer through owning property, still others in increasing their knowledge, and many feel rich with a household of pattering feet.

So far so good—but what would increase our wealth manifold is the knack of being able to wonder. Wonder at the biggest achievements and at the smallest achievements. Wonder at our feelings when in love or when the baby first says "mummy". Wonder at the birds in the sky and life at the bottom of the ocean. Wonder at the flowers that grow on the wayside.

This world of ours will never run short of wonders. So anybody and everybody can wonder to his heart's content, without depriving others of it. Will my letter be printed, I wonder!
